Vanessa Abbot is a cat lover through and through. She has three cats of her own, and she loves spending time with them. So when her cat, Max, brings home a severed human finger, she knows she's in for a wild ride.

Vanessa calls the police, and they quickly determine that the finger belongs to a woman named Sarah Jones. Sarah was a young woman who had recently moved to town, and she had no known enemies. Vanessa is determined to find out who killed Sarah, and she enlists the help of her friends and her cats.

As Vanessa investigates, she uncovers a web of secrets and suspects. Sarah was having an affair with a married man, and she was also involved in a local animal rights group. Vanessa suspects that Sarah's murder may be connected to either of these things.

Vanessa follows every lead she can, but she keeps running into dead ends. She's starting to lose hope, but then Max brings her a new clue. Max finds a piece of jewelry that belongs to Sarah, and Vanessa realizes that it's the key to solving the case.

Vanessa tracks down the owner of the jewelry, and she finally learns the truth about Sarah's murder. The killer is someone that Vanessa knows, and it's someone that she never would have suspected.

Vanessa confronts the killer, and she brings them to justice. She's proud of herself for solving the case, but she's also sad that Sarah is gone. She knows that Sarah was a good person, and she didn't deserve to die.
